The advertised date for opening the lands was Monday, August 4. As early as the previous Thursday night, a land boomer with a chair and roll of magazines, sat himself down at Baldwin's office door and proceeded to bide his time. He was soon joined by others and by Saturday night the sidewalk was covered for five rods with a patient line of people, waiting for the books to open Monday morning.

The Hawaiians were in the maority, although all resident nationalities were represented. Early Monday morning there appeared on the scene those who wanted land but who had not figured on butting into such a string of competitors. Fancy prices were offered for advanced positions in the line. The man who camped on the doorstep Thursday night sold his place at the head of the line for $350 cash. The purchaser secured a good 40-acre tract in Puna and is glad of his bargain, while the early riser is happy over his easy $100 per day.

In the whole allotment only one person took under the 999 year ease. The right of purchase lease was the favorite method.
